Reading Passage:

Human beings used speech as a means of communication long before writing was invented. Writing represents, or symbolizes the sounds we make when we speak. Written language is usually more formal than speech. In a typical conversation, a speaker will stop and start, leave a sentence unfinished, and say "err' or "umm 'when thinking what to say next. Written language, by contrast, is much tidier and organized. If you were to write exactly what people were saying in a casual conversation, you would end up with a very rough and untidy piece of writing.

Also, in a conversation, speakers often predict what someone is about to say next, and interrupt or talk at the same time as another person. When you speak, you can add color to what you say in a number of ways. You can make your voice louder so that it can have real effect; you can stress certain important words or phrases so that listeners pay special attention to them.

You can change the pace at which you speak, speeding up or slowing down can make your speech more interesting. Experienced public speakers use these techniques. In every day speech these techniques naturally make our conversation living and more interesting.

1. How can we add color to what we say?
2. Based on the text which sentence is not true?

a) In writing people can interrupt the writer
b) in a conversation we can stress important words
c)speeding up or slowing down make the speech interesting d)while talking, a speaker may leave a sentence unfinished

3. According to the passage, writing is a representation of…….

a) an unfinished sentence b) what someone is trying to say
c)what we say after thinking d) the sounds we produce when we speak

4. Using speaking techniques makes our conversation not natural and boring. a) T b) F
5. Oral language is more formal and much tidier. a) T b) F
