Some people fast for political reasons. In the early ۲۰th century, women in England and the United States were not allowed to vote. In protest, many women went on fast. They hoped that fasting would bring attention to this injustice. Mahatma Gandhi, the famous Indian leader, fasted ۱۷ times during his life. For Gandhi, fasting was a powerful political tool. In ۱۹٤۳, he fasted to bring attention to his country's need for independence. For ۲۱ days, he went without food. Another famous faster was Cesar Chavez. In the ۱۹٦۰s, he fasted for ۳ weeks. Why? His goal was to bring attention to the terrible working condition of farm workers in the United States.

Fasting is also a spiritual practice in many religions. Every year during the month of Ramadan, which is a religious holiday, Muslims fast from sunrise to sunset. Many Hindus fast on special occasions, as do some Christians and Buddhists.

Of course, not everyone fasts for political or religious reasons. Some people occasionally fast just because it makes them feel better. American writer Mark Twain thought it was the best medicine for common illnesses. Whenever he had a cold or a fever, he stopped eating completely. He said that this always made his cold or fever go away. Another American writer, Upton Sinclair, discovered fasting after years of overeating, indigestion, and headaches. His first fast lasted for ۱۲ days. During this time, his headaches and stomachaches went away. Sinclair said that fasting also made him more alert and energetic.
